An English Lady of rank and wealth sow Egypt, writes home as follows:— I fear aman deem me rather boastful of my horse-amship, when I tell you that two Arab hor-s which threw their cavaliers did not throw me. The cause, however, was not in my skill, but in the very remarkable predilection these intelligent animals feel toward the weaktrsor. Let the wildest and flercest Arabian be mounted by a woman, and you will see him suddenly grow mild and gentle as a lamb. I have had plenty of opportunity to make the experiment, and in my own stable there is a beautiful grey Arab, which nobody but myself dare ride He knows me, anticipates my wishes, and judiciously calculates the degree of fatigue I can bear without inconvenience. It is curious to see how he manages to quicken his ous to see how he manages to quicken his pace without shaking me, and the different sorts of steps he has invented to remedy contraditional purposes. Horses being as liable to forgetfulness as other organized beings, my incomparable grey would allow his natural ambition to oversome his callantry, and if anothbition to overcome his gallantry, and if another horse threatened to pass him, would start off with the speed of a whirlwind. Woe to me if under such circumstances, I were to trus to the strength of my arm, or the power of the bridle! I knew the gallant charger better.
Leaving my hand loose, and abandoning all thoughts of compulsion, I would take to persussion; pat him on the neck; call him by name beg him to be quiet, and deserve the piece of sugar waiting for him at home. Never did these gentle means fail. Instantly would he slacked his pace, prick up his ears as if fully comprehending his error, and come back to a soft ample, gently neighing, as if to crave parson for his momentary offence."

that will be exercted from the system, and cannot accumulate in sufficient quantity to ripen into diacase. Hence it is even more valuable for protection than cure, and few will ever suffer from Intermittents if they avail themselves of the protection this remody affords.
